On March 6-7, 2018, Induction Services Inc. system was audited against the requirements in CQI-9. Your heat treat system including all processes was included in the scope of that audit. I found no discrepancies between the requirements in CQI-9 and your current system. In addition, the practices observed were compliant with the supporting documentation.

I have followed the guidelines documented in the current revision of ISO 19011 and during the recent audit I was able to determine that your current system and the associated documentation are in compliance with the requirements in CQI-9 as well as ISO9001:2015.

Please keep in mind that an audit, by its very nature, is first of all a sampling of the system. From a practical standpoint it is unreasonable to attempt to look at all of the details. Secondly, the audit is a snapshot in time and is valid only at that point in time. It is always necessary to review the system periodically to verify that its status is maintained.

In summary, Induction Services Inc. is in compliance to CQI-9 without any reservations or encumbrances. I make this assertion based on my certification as a recognized and active Lead auditor, my experience with other ISO compliant and certified systems and on my findings while following the ISO 19011 guidelines. If any of your customers would like to contact me for verification or discussion, please feel free to provide my contact information to them.
